Nicaragua scare over in one week

WASHINGTON (AP)—As President Reagan was riding an avalanche of votes toward re-election the night of Nov. 6, reports that a possible Soviet shipment of MIG-21 jet fighters had reached Nicaragua stirred speculation that Reagan was preparing for a new military blow against the Sandinista government.

Three days later, the MIG reports proved to be false, but Nicaragua nonetheless was seized with a bad case of war jitters. Tanks rumbled through the streets of Managua, amid government warnings that a U.S. invasion was imminent.

A week later, the war scare cooled almost as quickly as it had begun. Washington was soporizing its claims of massive Soviet arms support to the Sandinistas, and even a U.S.-backed Nicaraguan opposition leader was saying the United States had overreacted.

How did the Nicaragua war scare of November 1984 get started, and why? Secretary of State George P. Shultz said it was the result of a leak, "a criminal act, in my opinion," from within the Reagan administration. Shultz and other U.S. officials denied repeatedly that an invasion of Nicaragua was being planned. Some suggested that Nicaragua itself might be girding to invade neighboring countries, a move that Nicaragua's foreign minister declared "absolutely absurd" and "in any event—futile."

Whatever the truth, it was clear when the episode faded away that Nicaragua greets with extreme skepticism any U.S. assurances of non-belligerence.

After all, American troops had occupied Nicaragua for most of the period between 1912 and 1933. More recently, the Reagan administration has used the CIA to organize a guerrilla movement against the leftist Sandinistas, mine Nicaraguan harbors and circulate an insurgency manual whose language seems to sanction assassinations of government officials.

Washington has other options short of an invasion. These could include renewed support for anti-government guerrillas, a naval blockade to prevent arms from reaching Nicaragua and an airstrike to destroy newly arrived Soviet helicopters and other armaments.

The White House and the CIA clearly want to resume military support for the 10,000 or so Nicaraguan guerrillas known as contras, whom the CIA has recruited, trained and financed. Shultz has supported negotiations with the Sandinistas aimed at resolving differences peacefully, but others in the administration are known to reject the idea of coexistence with a Marxist government in Central America and to favor a more confrontational approach.

By last Monday, Shultz was declaring the United States would "work in every way that we can to cast this episode in the light of the influence of our hemisphere."

Arthur Cruz, the U.S.-backed Nicaraguan opposition leader, said the administration's hard line toward the Sandinistas was "not helpful" to the opposition movement.

Provo SWAT team checks its tactics in training exercise

The Provo police SWAT team was called to the scene of a "domestic disturbance" Thursday afternoon, but there were no arrests after the door-bashing, window-breaking and "shooting" were over. The incident was part of a training exercise.

Police Chief Sven C. Nielsen said the training exercise, which took place at East Stadium Drive, "gives us a chance to test all of our communications, as well as our tactics."

The exercise started at 1 p.m., when a "domestic disturbance" call was received by a dispatcher.

Before breaking into the house at 3 p.m., six officers and Nielsen huddled and discussed plans in a spot not visible to the "suspect."

By that time, the suspect had barricaded the windows, threatened to shoot a female companion and yowled in the yard and fired at least three blank shots.

While a negotiator tried to talk the man out of the house, three rapid shots rang out, then some muffled shouts could be heard.

The officers waited a few moments, then broke the door open. There were two crates of traveling glass as the SWAT team checked each room, then a single shot.

That shot showed that the "suspect," John, was really in the room they thought he was. The last efforts to defuse the situation were then made.

The officer shouted, "Come on up, John. It's all over." He then started to break into the room and two more shots were fired.

About 10 minutes before 4 p.m., a SWAT team member walked out of the house, took off his gas mask and said, "We gassed him."

A radio message at 3:55 p.m. from the police dispatcher announced, "The situation is terminated."

Lebanese make demands

Want troop withdrawal, $8 billion in reparations

NAQURA, Lebanon (AP)—Lebanese negotiators on Thursday demanded a quick and complete withdrawal of Israeli troops from South Lebanon and payment of $8 billion to $10 billion in war reparations by the Jewish state.

The Lebanese delegation presented a long list of tough demands in the second round of negotiations with Israeli officials at the headquarters of the United Nations peacekeeping force.

Israel is concerned with the security of its northern border if the troops are pulled back. Almost every point the Lebanese raised on the future of South Lebanon conflicted with Israel's previously stated positions.

Conference sources said Israel rejected the Lebanese declaration and asked instead for a detailed Lebanese plan on security arrangements following an Israeli withdrawal from the country it invaded 2½ years ago.

The Lebanese agreed to continue discussions of the security issue when the talks resume Monday in this border town, according to the sources who spoke on condition they not be identified.

The Lebanese demands, read by chief delegate Brig. Gen. Mohammed Hajj, included denunciations of Israel's occupation army and accusations that Israel had "strangled liberty and freedom of expression" in South Lebanon.

Conference sources and the joint closing statement issued after the six-hour session indicated the Israelis refrained from arguing over the Lebanese charges in order to keep the talks from bogging down.

Hajj's statement was seen as an opening bargaining position and an effort to justify Lebanon's participation in the talks to extremist factions in Lebanon and the Arab world.

In the statement read by Hajj, Lebanon demanded Israel enact "complete and quick withdrawal from all Lebanese territory, unconditionally." It spoke of "the eagerness of the Lebanese people to be freed from the big prison in which the Israeli occupation has been strangling them" since Israel's army invaded Lebanon on June 6, 1982.

A six-page copy of Hajj's statement given to reporters by a Lebanese spokesman offered this explanation of the demands for Israel to pay war reparations:

"Lebanese towns and villages were devastated and destroyed from south to north, passing through the asphalt of Beirut, resulting in damages estimated at a value ranging between $8 and $10 billion which should be indemnified by the Israeli side, and inflated casualties exceeding 1,000 dead and 1,000 wounded among Lebanese."

That casualty count did not include the thousands of Palestinian and other war casualties, whose exact number is not known.

The Lebanese also demanded that all security measures in the area evacuated by Israel be given to the regular Lebanese authorities — the army, the police and the general security forces.

They rejected the continued existence of "an illegal armed Lebanese organization," such as the Israeli-backed militia known as the South Lebanon Army.

This 2,000-man militia is a key element of Israel's withdrawal plans. The Israelis do not want to entrust the security of their northern border to the regular Lebanese army, which has a history of falling apart at critical moments.

The Lebanese and Israeli delegates met under heavy security after a week of wrangling over Israel's arrest of four senior Shiite Muslim militiamen in South Lebanon.

New moms assisted by house calls

Moths and new babies going home after a 12-hour or shorter stay are receiving additional support from hospital personnel through a new home-visit program.

Nurses at American Fork Hospital and Orem Community Hospital make personal visits to the homes of women who stay at the hospitals less than 24 hours. The purpose of these visits is to answer any questions the mother may have about her newborn.

Ruth Morton, R.N., at American Fork Hospital, visits each of the new mothers within 24 to 36 hours after they leave the hospital. She checks vital signs of mothers and infants and answers any questions.

In addition to this service, a telephone call is made to all new mothers from the obstetrics ward personnel after the mother leaves the medical facility.

Although Sharon Barrus, R.N., at Orem Community Hospital, has only been involved with the home visit program for three months, OCH has conducted this service since the hospital opened in 1981.

"Short-stay visits are very popular here in this area. The biggest reason people return home shortly after they have their baby is because it is less expensive and because they want to get back home to their family rather than stay in the hospital another day or so."

"The hour or so we spend with the women is very important to them. They seem to appreciate the time we take to answer their questions. We ask questions that draw out the concerns they have about their baby or themselves," said Barrus.

New mothers may select from several short-stay programs at the hospitals, with some going home after only two hours. Some select a short-stay program, then pay an additional service charge for any additional hours they are there, said Creta Blackburn, APH information director.

Eloise Anderson, OB Department Manager at APH, said personnel feel it is important to give the new mothers this support because of many questions that may come up pertaining to the care of the newborn.

"I have visited about a dozen homes from Provo to the Point of the Mountain since the program began the first of October," Morton said.

"I even visited one mother at a motel. The mother had left the hospital after a 12-hour stay, but didn't feel up to going home to five children, so she and her husband had rented a motel room in Provo for an additional night," she said.

The first visit Morton made was to an Oriental couple, and another was to a county address near Lehi. "I am learning all the back roads and where the country addresses are," she said.

"This program was started because problems sometimes don't show up until 18 hours or more after a new baby is born," said Blackburn. "In the case of a first baby especially, the problem may not be picked up immediately. By making the home visit, the registered nurse may spot the trouble."

In the first 10 visits, Morton said she has found a few cases of jaundice and noticed a swollen eye duct, but generally everything has been normal. When something is found to be wrong, the mother is urged to contact her physician immediately instead of waiting until the regularly scheduled appointment.

The visits also provide a teaching opportunity, said Anderson. "When a mother stays three or more days, she has the chance to see our special films and attend classes on child care, but mothers who stay 12 hours aren't here long enough for that. The home-visit gives her an opportunity to question the nurse about anything that may have come up since she went home."

The 12-hour stay is becoming more popular for new mothers as hospital costs rise and young couples do not have insurance that may have come up since she went home."

Morton said the visits have been well received and are appreciated by the women. "It is really a very good tool to be able to give them this extra help. Many people can't believe we care this much."

Y professor's research blasts Geneva works

OREM, Utah (AP)—A Brigham Young University professor has released a study blasting U.S. Steel Corp.'s treatment of its Utah employees and predicting an imminent shutdown of the Geneva works here.

Dr. Warner Woodward, associate professor at BYU's School of Management, on Thursday released a 160-page study of the nation's steel industry, including the Geneva plant.

Woodward says the plant meets U.S. Steel's criteria for an imminent shutdown.

"We've been looking at shutdowns nationwide, and Geneva has all the warning signs," he said.

Woodward said he and a team of research graduate students examined the nation's steel industry as a way of assessing the plight of the Geneva plant.

Traders think they have had a kind of long-term affair with U.S. Steel, neutralizing it as a slow rope," Woodward said.

Meanwhile, spokesmen for U.S. Steel say the report looks like a surprise.

"It is difficult to comment on a study we have not seen," said Jack Bolow. "It is also surprising to us that a study of this type could be completed without any input from our company."

Moreover, the way in which the study was announced suggests the intent to gain attention to the authors of the study rather than provide any new helpful or constructive information about our industry," he said.

"We were not extended the courtesy of receiving advance copies of the study and, as a result, we are at a great disadvantage. But from what we have heard about it, it sounds like much to do about things and it does not appear helpful to what we are trying to achieve at Geneva," Bolow said.

In the study, Woodward cited the trickle-down effect of profits, a lack of investment by the parent company, the maintenance of an older work force and a shrinking steel market as a few of the trends indicating the imminent demise of the plant.

Spectators, competitors to dance at Medas Ball

By MARNI BELL
Universe Staff Writer

Ballroom dancers from throughout the Western states will compete at the BYU Medas Ball and Dance Championships on Saturday at 6:00 p.m. in the ELWC Ballroom.

The ball is geared to "anybody who enjoys ballroom dancing, whether they enjoy watching it, participating in it or competing in it," said Tom Murdock, public relations director for the ballroom dance division.

The annual event draws nearly 1,500 ballroom dance enthusiasts who watch or compete in an evening of competition, general dancing and entertainment. People from Idaho, Nevada and parts of Utah are expected to compete along with BYU students.

Two parts There are two parts to the ball. One is the medals exam, taken by students who wish to see how proficient they are in their dance level. They will only be competing with themselves. Students in the social dance classes 180, 280 and 380 take this exam.

The other part is the Medas Ball, which is a dance competition consisting of 13 categories. Students in dance classes can choose to be in these competitions also.

"This will give the students in those classes the chance to compete in what they are doing in class," said Murdock.

Social dance classes will be dancing the "Cha Cha," "Hustle" and "West Coast Swing." The international dancers will perform the "Quick Step," "Argentin," and "Waltz." The Latin American section will consist of the "Rumba," "International," "Cha Cha" and "Samba."

Another portion of the Medas Ball is called the competition. Those who enter the open American-style section will have to dance all four American styles, which includes the "Swing," the "Cha Cha," the "New York Hustle" and the "Waltz." There will also be a Latin American and ballroom section.

Murdock said, "One of the highlights of the ball is the Open Cabaret, in which couples choose their own music, do their own choreographing and costuming."

Spectator dancing

There will also be general dancing for the spectators and a professional dance demonstration by Lee and Linda Wakefield, the 1984 winners of the United States Professional Theatrical Competition.

Along with the Wakefields, the BYU Ballroom Dancers, who hold the National Formation Team Title, will show their precision in both ballroom and Latin American dances.

Tickets and information are available in the ballroom dance office, 263 RB, 378-4623, between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m.

Duo will present piano recital

If two heads are better than one, then four hands must be better than two in a piano recital.

Marian Hintze Monson and Rhoda Vaun Young will join in a duo recital Saturday at 5 p.m. in the Madron Recital Hall, HFAC.

The recital is free to the public. Both women have performed in recitals throughout Utah and the United States. Monson is currently a piano instructor at BYU and Young teaches private piano lessons.

The duo will perform music by Beethoven, Schubert, Rachmaninoff, Brahms and Baroque.

They will also present the Utah premiere of Victor Babin's "David and Goliath." This piece incorporates several

Men's and women's choruses join to perform 'best choral literature'

The Men's Chorus, under the direction of Mack Wilberg, and the Women's Chorus, under the direction of Rebecca Wilcox, will join together for their fall concert today at 8 p.m. in the Jorgensen Concert Hall, HFAC.

The two choruses, both audition groups, have been working hard for this concert, said Wilberg.

"It will be a varied program of some of the best choral literature available. This is going to be an interesting and fun concert," he said.

The Women's Chorus will open the concert with Nena Porpora's "Magnificat." This piece will feature several soloists and will be accompanied by harpsichord and brass ensemble. Wilcox said.

Head and Gustav Holst, both English composers. The Women's Chorus will conclude their portion of the concert with the "Finale," from "The Gondoliers" by Arthur Sullivan.

The Men's Chorus will perform George Frederic Handel's "Let Their Celestial Harps Be All United," from the oratorio "Samson." "In Nomine Jesu," from "Liber Gradualis" by Jacob Handl, "Jubilate Deo," from "Symphonias Sacrae," by Heinrich Schütz and Antonin Dvorak's "Slavonic Songs," op. 48. The Men's Chorus will also perform various spirituals and folk songs.

The two choruses will combine at the end of the concert to perform Gustav Holst's "Let All Mortal Flesh Keep Silence," op. 36a, conducted by Wilcox. The concert is free, and all interested are invited to attend.

Cougars better watch for Utah surprise Utes haven't got a chance of beating Y

Editor's note: The sports editors of The Daily Utah Chronicle and The Daily Universe exchanged columns for the BYU-Utah game.

By MARK SAAL
Chronicle Sports Editor

This is great. The Daily Universe, that bastion of truth, justice and just a rolling good time, has actually asked little old me to share my thoughts on the Utah-BYU game.

Those who know me might be expecting some sort of "Rag on the Cougars" tirade. In the spirit of friendship, and to show BYU students there are no hard feelings, I'd like to make a peace offering to the BYU football players in the form of a little academic help.

In the past, the problem with all this Utah-BYU rhetoric has been that big words like "humiliation" and "degradation" have been used — words that exceed these BYU football players' vocabularies.

To remedy that situation, here's a Cougar First-Year Reader. See Utah. See Utah run. Run, Utah run. See BYU pass. Pass, BYU pass. See Robbie Bosco. See the Utah defense. See Robbie west his pants when he sees the Utah defense. Bad, Robbie. See the Utah defense take Robbie apart. Where's Robbie's head? Oh, there it is, back on the BYU 5-yard line. See Mark Stevens. See Eddie Johnson. See Danny Huey. See Utah win. Win, Utah win. See the scoreboard. See all the pretty lights by its name. See a three and a five. Thirty-five. See BYU a half of the scoreboard. Whars are all the pretty lights? Gee, just a little more wine. Oh? Better luck next time, Robbie. Sorry about that, LaVell. See the AP poll. See the Cornblazers. See the Longhorns. See the funny fumbles. (Related to Spot, no doubt.) See BYU. Me neither.

Years ago a song was written about the Utah-BYU contest. It was written and performed by a not-so-famous singer by the name of Linda Thernostat.

Well, to make a long story short, the singer's cousin, Linda Ronstadt, pirated the melody away, changed the words and turned it into a little ditty that sold millions — called "Blue Bayou."

"We feel so bad, we just goe weep and whine. We were moanin' and we been cryin'. Got a feeling we could be dyin' — we're BYU."

"Other schools, you know we hear what they say. They tout and towe and call us all gay. We'll show those bullies were not that way — were BYU."

Chorus:
"We'd better win on Saturday out on that field of play, we're BYU. And if we don't lose, you'll hear it in the news, 'bout BYU. But if we drop the game to those Utes so lame, we know just where to lay the blame — just like Utah State we can get up for a date with the U of U."

"All our cocks are fatter than pigs, and our RVs, they have to wear wings — at BYU."

"The girls they come here to better their fate. They're tired of waiting for someone to date. They want to major in finding a mate — at BYU."

"Our Cougar football team is a coach's dream, oh BYU. Each player plays so fair, and they never swear, at Ronald Reagan in a recount. No matter how hard Ute coaches, players, fans — and sports editors — try to convince themselves otherwise, it just isn't going to happen.

They're so clean this well tell, they won't end up in... well, at the U of U.

"We want a national championship. To th' Fiesta Bowl we want a trip. On reality-TV we've lost our grip — we're BYU."

"We know in Utah's hair we haven't got a prayer — poor BYU. We'll try with all our might for colors blue and white — oh BYU. But at that final gun when the Utes have won and our glory days are over and done, the coaches and the fans will kick our little asses back to the U of U."

Good luck, Zoots. You'll need it.

By SCOTT D. PIERCE
Universe Sports Editor

Utah's football team has about as much chance of upsetting BYU as Walter Mondale has of beating Ronald Reagan in a recount. No matter how hard Ute coaches, players, fans — and sports editors — try to convince themselves otherwise, it just isn't going to happen.

In the last few years, the Utes have forgotten how to beat the Cougars. The Sportsquid question in the Oct. 28 edition of The Daily Utah Chronicle was, "What year did the Ute football team last beat BYU and what was the final score?"

When the last time you've beaten your biggest rival becomes a matter of trivia, you know you're in trouble. A lot has been said about how tough the Utes are in Rice Stadium. Utah hasn't lost at home since the end of the 1982 season — to none other than BYU.

The Utes have won 10 in Salt Lake City. Big deal. All those Utah fans still clinging to the desperate hope that the home-field advantage might prove decisive should consider that the Cougars have won 11 in a row on the road, not to mention five of their last six in Rice Stadium.

Utah fans shouldn't get too excited about their team's chances of catching the Cougars unaware. The BYU coaches and players have been listening all season to the eerie whinnies of our sports-writing team recognition of its own this week — as the Cougars' latest victim.

Sure, BYU has had some close calls this season. The wins over Pittsburgh, Hawaii and Wyoming were all nail-biters, but the Cougars always find a way to win.

But while BYU is finding ways to win, Utah is finding ways to grasp defeat from the jaws of victory. Remember Wyoming's 98-yard fumble return? How about Utah's fumble in Hawaii?

Unfortunatley for the Utah offense, when they're not on the field the Utah defense is. Robbie Bosco, Glen Kodewski, David Mills, Kelly Smith and the best offensive line in the country will light up the Rice Stadium scoreboard like the Utes with they could.

If Utah should by some miracle stay close until the final moments of the game, the BYU gridgers can count on Coach Chuck Stobart to come to their rescue. Stobart will undoubtedly make another brilliant coaching decision like neglecting to try an outside kick (remember Washington State?) or try just one more play before the field goal attempt, like he did in San Diego.

But unlike The Daily Chronicle, The Daily Universe isn't calling for Stobart to be replaced. BYU fans love Chuck. His 16-16-1 record at Utah typifies the Ute grid program — mediocre. Even giving Utah seven points for playing at home, it will be BYU 45, Utah 20 on Saturday. Maybe the Utes can root for the Cougars to hit No. 1 in the polls, so they can say they've been beaten by the best.

Cougars out to scalp Utes in 'bowl game'

By DOUG FOX
Universe Sports Writer

The Utah Runnin' Utes may not be traveling to a post-season bowl game this year, but right now they couldn't care less. Utah plays what it considers its bowl game Saturday when it continues its long-standing rivalry with BYU.

The game will be broadcast live on channel 2 at 11:30 a.m. BYU at 10-0 is favored to win but there's so much emotion tied up in this game that anything could happen. Utah, with a 6-4 season record, needs a solid endgame to get ready for BYU. BYU is the game the team looks forward to every year.

Utah quarterback Mark Stevens summed up the attitude of his team about this weekend's game. "I feel this is like a bowl game for us," he said. "If we can beat BYU our season and our record will be forgotten. We've got them at home and we've got them right where we want them. I'm really excited."

A win over BYU Saturday would probably mean more to Utah than a trip to the Holiday Bowl. Playing BYU at Rice Stadium, where the Utes have won 10 in a row with a chance to eliminate BYU's dream of a national title and undefeated season. Utah couldn't have asked for a better way to end its season. But if anyone thinks that BYU is taking this game lightly they better think again.

Utah's ever-vanquished Dave Wright said the team recognizes the importance of the game to the Utah players and fans. "They're going to get after us a bit more than anybody we've played this year," he said. "It's their biggest game. It's the highest ranked game they've ever played in their history."

The importance of the 11:30 a.m. game is not lost on either of the two head coaches. Referring to the rivalry between the two schools BYU coach LaVell Edwards said, "This is really what it's all about. It has all the makings for a great game."

team but I think we've had some very good things happening to us. I'm counting on them this week to get jacked up and play a great team. It should be an intense and exciting game because we are a much better football team than people think."

BYU will take its highest ranking ever into the game. While both wire service polls list BYU at No. 5, Sports Illustrated named the Cougars No. 1. BYU has won 21 consecutive games, the longest in the nation, including 11 straight road victories.

Last year the two teams played before the largest gathering for a sporting event in Utah history. The game played in Provo before 56,210 fans was a 55-7 blowout for BYU. The Cougar defense picked off five Utah passes and recovered two fumbles constantly giving the offense great field position.

The last time the two teams met in Rice Stadium, BYU was a 17-12 winner in a hard-fought battle in which Utah outplayed the Cougars in most aspects of the game except the offense. That loss to BYU in 1982 was Utah's last loss at home.

The series record between the two teams stands at 38-16-1 for Utah. Of the 16 BYU victories, 11 have come in the last 12 years under Edwards. The only defeat under Edwards was in 1976 when the Cougars lost 23-22 in Salt Lake City.

A determining factor in Saturday's game might depend on whether BYU's defense can stop Utah's potent running attack. BYU's offense, which leads the nation in total offense and passing and is second in scoring, is almost impossible to stop. Utah is eighth in the nation in total offense and fifth in rushing offense. If the Cougar defense, which has only yielded an average of 18.5 points per game, can stop Utah's runers, in particular freshman tailback Eddie Johnson, BYU should be in good shape. Utah does not want the game to turn into a scoring battle.

If Utah is to have its revenge it's going to be its own favor," said Stobart. "When given the opportunity were going to have to score. Our defense is going to have to play well."

"As long as we can stop their offense we should be able to handle them pretty easily," Whittingham said. Although Utah has four losses and a tie this year that record can be deceiving. The Utes biggest margin of defeat has only been seven points.

Edwards said he recognizes Utah's record doesn't represent the team's talent and ability. "Since I've been head coach this is probably the best Utah team we've seen," he said.

Editors: Utah better watch out

By SCOTT D. PIERCE
and TROY STEINER
Sports Editors

The college football season is winding down and national rivalries are coming to the forefront. In Utah, no rivalry is more important than the BYU-Utah feud.

Although the Cougars are far behind in the overall series, they've taken 11 of the last 12 games from the Utes. While a win could make the season a success for Utah, BYU has even more on the line—the nation's longest winning streak, an undefeated season and a possible national championship.

Some other big grudge matches scheduled for Saturday include Oklahoma-Nebraska, Michigan-Ohio State and USC-UCLA.

Besides the Blue-Red battle in Salt Lake City, the only other Western Athletic Conference game this week are New Mexico at San Diego State and Wyoming at UTEP. With the Cougars winning the conference crown two weeks ago, those two games mean just about nothing.

BYU at Utah: This is always a big game, but the Cougars' win streak and ranking make it even more important. The Utes are looking to avenge last year's 55-7 humiliation, and have developments of knocking off BYU. The Utes must think they have a lot riding on the game, but the Cougars have their eyes on No. 1. Despite the hype, neither Troy nor Scott expect BYU to struggle. Troy takes the Cougars by 11. Scott makes it 25.

Colorado State at Arizona State: ASU isn't having one of its better seasons, but neither is CSU. The Sun Devils shouldn't have much of a battle on their hands. Troy predicts a 28-point Arizona State romp. Scott expects the margin to 21.

New Mexico at San Diego State: The Aztecs aren't as bad as they looked losing to BYU 34-3. The Lobos are as bad as they looked losing to BYU 48-0. Troy likes SDSU by 10. Scott forecasts a 17-point Aztec win.

Wyoming at Texas-El Paso: It seems like no matter what they do, the Cowboys will still be winners. Wyoming took the week off against South Dakota State last week, and shouldn't have to work too hard this week, either. Both Troy and Scott look for a two-touchdown win by the Cowboys. Texas at Texas Christian: TCU is the surprise team of the year and could end up in the Cotton Bowl with a win. Texas finally got what it deserved last week—a loss. The Longhorns should be ready to take back, though. Texas takes TCU by three in an upset. Scott sticks with Texas by seven.

Oklahoma at Nebraska: All the Cornhuskers need for another Big Eight title and an Orange Bowl bid is a tie, but they won't be happy with less than a win. Oklahoma could make their season with a win. In another upset forecast, Troy goes with the Sooners by six. Scott expects the Huskers to triumph by 10.

Michigan at Ohio State: The Big Ten is Pete Rozelle's kind of conference — it's come closer to parity than any other major league. Or maybe it's just that name of the Big Ten members are any good. Whatever the case may be, a win by Ohio State would put them in the Rose Bowl against USC. Both Troy and Scott predict the Buckeyes will be headed for Pasadena, predicting a 10-point win for Ohio State.

Penn State at Notre Dame: If BYU is one of the bright new stars of college football, Penn State and Notre Dame are two failing stars. The Irish are continuing the mediocre tradition begun by Gerry Faust, and Penn State is a mere shadow of its former self. Troy likes the Nittany Lions by a touchdown. Scott cuts it to a field goal.

Southern Cal at UCLA: The Trojans pulled off one of their biggest wins in years last week, knocking off Ohio-1 Washington. UCLA hasn't lived up to their potential all year, but his rivalry brings out the best in a team. Troy predicts a 10-point USC win, while Scott expects the Trojans to be down after last week and takes UCLA in an upset by one.

South Carolina at Navy: Nothing could make The Daily Universe sports editors — or the rest of pro — happier than a loss by the Gamecocks. Unfortunately, it isn't going to happen this week. Fortunately, South Carolina has to play at Clemson next week, and the Tigers could do the Cougars a big favor. Troy takes South Carolina by 13. Scott increases the margin to 20.

Last week Troy correctly predicted USC's upset of Washington and took underdog South Carolina over Florida State. Scott played it safe and got burned. Troy was 8-for-10 last week, while Scott only managed 6-for-10.

Overall: After 11 weeks and 110 games, Troy finally caught up with Scott, who has bombed the last three weeks. If only Troy had picked BYU over Pittsburgh back in August, he'd be ahead right now.

Both Troy and Scott are 78-for-110 (70%).

Y bowlers hosting invitational tourney

The BYU bowling team hosts the 18th annual BYU Invitational Tournament Friday and Saturday. Competition will be in the Wilcox Center Bowling Lanes. The teams will bowline Friday from 8 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. and on Saturday from 8:30 a.m. to 8:50 p.m.

Coach Shafter Brown said he expects about 14 teams will compete in the tournament. Teams expected to attend include Utah State, Southern Utah State, Arizona State, Washington State and defending BYU Invitational champion, Cal-State Northridge.

Awards will be given for the men's and women's team event, doubles, singles and all-events. Brown said his team aren't as strong this year as they have been in previous years, but he still anticipates they will do well in the competition.

"We have the home-court advantage. That's why we should do well," he said.

In addition to the intercollegiate competition, Brown said there will also be a coaches' and advisers' roll-off Friday at 12:30 p.m. BYU assistant coach Clay Conn will represent BYU in the competition.

According to Brown, the coaches' roll-off is one of the highlights of the tournament.

BYU men's and women's teams have been up and down this year, Brown said.

"The key to success is team members that can adjust to lane conditions. If they find the lane conditions to their liking they'll do well," he said.

According to Brown, nationally ranked Washington State and Arizona State will be tough competition for the Cougars.

"We'll be competing against some of the best," he said.

The scheduling of the tournament has been a difficult task. Brown said more of the invited teams would have been able to attend had the tournament been at a different time.

ROCHESTER, Mich. (AP) — The Michigan Panthers of the United States Football League have told their employees the team is closing shop and Thursday's paycheck will be their last.

Vince Lombardi Jr., the club's president and general manager, said even if a proposed merger with the Oakland Invaders falls through, the team will not stay in the Detroit area.

The Panthers won the league's first championship in 1983.

PEACE Special Work CORPS For Special People

Peace Corps volunteers are people pretty much like you. People with commitment and skills who have assessed their lives and decided they want to be of service to others in a troubled world.

The problems our volunteers deal with overseas aren't new. Such as the cycle of poverty that traps one generation after another because they're too busy holding on to get ahead. The debilitating effects of malnutrition, disease, and inadequate shelter. Education and skills that are lacking, and the means to get them too.

Your college training qualifies you to handle more of these problems than you might think. Such as teaching nutrition and health practices, designing and building bridges and irrigation systems, working on reforestation and fisheries programs, introducing better agricultural techniques, advising small businesses and establishing cooperatives, or teaching math and science at the secondary level.

The number of jobs to do is nearly as great as the number of volunteers who have served since 1961: Nearly 90,000. More volunteers are being chosen now for two-year assignments beginning in the next 3-12 months in Africa, Asia, Latin America, and the Pacific.

Our representatives will be pleased to discuss the opportunities with you.

1984-85 Cougar caces a mystery

Scott Sinek, in a familiar role — defenda, ayas the ball in action last season. Sinek and returning lettermen Marty Perry, Chris Nikchevich and Timo Saarelainen are expected to help carry the Cougars.

By TROY STEINER
Asst. Sports Editor

As Thanksgiving approaches and the air gets colder it's the season to move indoors for sporting events, specifically the Marriott Center. It's time once again to examine the BYU men's basketball team.

There have been many great mystery writers in the world, but none of them could come up with a story quite as mystifying as the 1984-85 basketball team.

With the loss of four starters and two other major contributors from last year's team, the Cougars are looking to new talent to get them through the regular season into the WAC tournament and possibly into the NCAAAs again, after finishing their 1983-84 season in the second round of the national tournament.

With the departure of Devin Durrant, BYU's all-time second leading scorer, Brett Applegate, last year's leading rebounder, Jim Usevitch and Mike Smith, the Cougars lost 74 percent of their scoring punch.

Although most of the scoring power is gone, the real problem for the Cougars lies to be the lack of major college experience on the front line.

The Cougars have four guards returning, along with forward Timo Saarelainen, who redshirted last year. But with eight new players the big question mark seems to be the front line and the experience, according to BYU coach Ladell Andersen.

"We have four excellent guards coming back," he said. "We always hope they were bigger and stronger, but by any standards they are very good."

Saarelainen is expected to shoulder

some of the offensive responsibilities, but the rest will have to come from senior guards Scott Sinek or Marty Perry, junior Chris Nikchevich or the junior college transfers BYU acquired after last season.

"We're kind of a mystery team," said Andersen. "I don't know what to predict. If you have experience you can usually predict what's going to happen."

This year's team can look pretty good in practice, but you don't know what's going to happen in the game."

The main reason for Andersen's concern is that two of the five starters will most likely be freshmen or junior college transfers without any major college playing experience.

"Our front line is the big question mark," the Cougar mentor said. "I feel we have a proven player in Timo Saarelainen — that helps a great deal."

Assistant head coach Roger Reid said Saarelainen has as good ability as any basketball player ever at BYU.

"Timo's time to come into his own," Reid said.

Besides Saarelainen, Reid, Eric Kellogg, a JC transfer from Dickinson State in North Dakota, is expected to fill part of the void left by Applegate and Usevitch.

"We think he (Kellogg) is a really good talent," Andersen said. "When he gets himself conditioned to play major college ball, we think that he'll be an outstanding player."

Also expected to shoulder part of the load will be two JC transfers from Ricks College and two smaller freshmen forwards. From Ricks come Tom Grutling, a 6-foot-10 center/forward, and Bryan Fink, a 6-foot-8 forward, who was selected as a National Junior College All-American.

Reid calls Fink a real work horse — a "blue-collar worker."

The two freshmen expected to contribute this season are Jeff Chatman from Talladega, Alabama, and Anthony Matthews, from Modesto, Calif.

"He (Chatman) has a good basketball body — long arms and big hands," Andersen said. "I think he has potential. He has a lot of good raw talent and is in the developing stage."

Another player who should help the Cougar hoopers this season is Alan Pollard, Carl's older brother. Pollard, a 6-foot-9 returned missionary, should see some action at forward or center.

So far this season the Cougars are nursing injuries, which have slowed down the team's progress, according to Andersen. But if they can be healthy at the start of the season and everything comes together, the Cougars could contend for the WAC title again this year.

Although it looks like a rebuilding year for the cagers, don't forget that the BYU football team was also supposed to be rebuilding this year — and look where the gridiron are now.

Recently, all the conference coaches got together in Denver, Colo., to preview their teams in front of 30 writers and broadcasters. The coaches and writers unanimously selected Texas-E Paso as the favorite to win the WAC again this year.

The Miners have almost their entire squad returning from a year-long Colorado State was picked to finish second and the Cougars expected to wind up third. Interesting — Sports Illustrated also picked the football team to finish third in the conference.

Y basketball program has come a long way

By NEIL BAIR
Universe Sports Writer

The BYU basketball team took the floor against Brigham Young High School in its 1917-18 season. With much imagination one can picture a capacity crowd of nearly 700 "jammed" into the gym on the third floor of the Training School building on the then-UTV campus, the site of Cougar home games.

On that day, the Cougars downed BYHS 10-29 to launch a successful 42 campaign for the season. Knowledgeable teams such as Lehi High School, Hinkley High School and perennial foe, the University of Utah.

But little did anyone know that some day there would be conference tournaments, 7-foot centers and nationwide television audiences to witness games.

Actually, the basketball program at BYU dates back even earlier than 1917. The first Cougar cage team sailed up near the turn of the century, but it wasn't until 1917, when the Cougars entered the Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference, that records of wins and losses were kept.

The Cougars continued to play their home games in the tiny Training School gym until 1928, when they moved into the Women's Gym, west side of University Avenue across from Academy Square. Its seating capacity was nearly double that of the old gym. During that 1928-29 season, BYU All-American Elwood Romney led the Cougars to a successful 20-10 season.

BYU went 27-156 in their 18-year stay in the women's gym, probably the most successful period in its history. In 1941-42, Coach Edwin R. Kimball guided the Cougars to a 17-3 record. The team's 13-game winning streak that season is still a school record.

Those who held the reigns at BYU during the "Women's Gym" era included G. Ott Romney (1928-35), Kimball (1936, 1938-41), Fred "Buck" Dixon (1937-38) and Floyd Millet (1942-49).

The 1,000-seat Springville High school gym housed BYU home games from 1946 to 1950. It was during that period that the university and current BYU head coach Ladell Andersen first became acquainted, as Andersen starred for the rival Utah State Aggies. The 1950 season also marked the first of 23 campaigns at BYU for coach Stan Watts.

Following the 1949-50 season, the Cougars were forced to leave the Springville High gym. While waiting for the Smith Fieldhouse to be completed, they had to locate another place to play their home games. The University of Utah offered BYU its Elmer Nielsen Fieldhouse as a temporary home.

In 1951, the team moved into the spacious 10,000-seat Smith Fieldhouse where it played its home games for the following 20 years.

Construction of the J. Willard Marriott Center was completed in 1971, and the Cougars have remained there ever since. Able to seat 23,000 people, the Marriott Center was the largest on-campus basketball arena in the nation at that time. The Cougars won their first 13 games in the new auditorium before falling to Santa Clara 65-64 in December of 1972.

Since 1971, the Cougars have a 226-146 mark under the helm of Watts (one season), Glenn Fetter (three), Frank Arnold (eight) and Andersen (one).

Since 1960, BYU has claimed 11 conference championships, 11 trips to the NCAA post season tournament and five to the National Invitation tournament in New York City's Madison Square Garden.

In 1949-50 and 1950-51, Cougars Joe Nelson and Mel Hutchins led their respective teams to Rocky Mountain Conference Championships. In 1956, Nelson helped the Cougars to a fourth-place finish in the NCAA tournament while Hutchins led BYU to a fourth-place finish in the NCAAAs and an NIT championship in 1959. Nelson, a 6-foot-3 forward, and Hutchins, a 6-foot-6 center, were selected All-American recognition their senior years.

In 1966, senior guard Dick Nemeth led the cage to a 29-3 record and their second NIT championship. The '66 squad was the most prolific scoring team in BYU history, averaging a whopping 85.5 points per game.

Nemeth's 24 points-per-game average ranks him third behind Danny Ainge (24.4 in 1980-81) and Devin Durrant (27.5 last season) in scoring average in a season and earned him first-team All-America honors by Coaches and Look Magazine.

A 6-foot-11 Yugoslav named Kresimir Cosic led the Cougars to a 38-23 record from 1971-73 and tournament appearances in 1971 and 1972. His 1,512 points are fourth on BYU's all-time career scoring list behind Ainge (2,467), Durrant (2,388) and Fred Roberts (1,814).

Perhaps the most memorable BYU tournament team was the 1980-81 squad led by the All-American Ainge. Following a successful 23-4 regular season finish, BYU defeated Princeton in the first round of the NCAA tournament. The Cougars then crushed highly-touted UCLA 78-65 behind Ainge's 37 points, and a layup by the 6-foot-6 senior gave BYU a 61-50 victory over Notre Dame just five days later.

The glory was short-lived, however, as the Cougars lost 41-52 to Halib Sampson and the top-ranked Virginia Cavaliers to end their hopes of a national title.

Many things have happened in the BYU basketball program since then and the end of the 1977 season of 1977 against BYU. For instance, Bob Skousen's school record of 41 points against UCLA back in 1951. Or, the late Michael Brooks' lightning 19-point performance in the scoreboard for 51 points in a triple-overtime loss to the Cougars in the 1979 Cougar Classic. Or BYU hitting just 10 field goals in a 27-26 loss to Wyoming in 1982.

It is doubtful that coach E.L. Roberts and his BYU team could have envisioned scholarships, slam dunks, three-point plays and shot clocks back in 1917, just as it would be hard for Andersen and his crew to imagine black shoes, center jumps following each basket and fans sitting on top of players' lockers to watch a game, as they did 67 years ago.

BYU basketball has come a long way.

Cougars add first black players in 6 years

By OAVE LEWIS and DOUG FOX
Senior Reporters

With the entire loss of last year's front-line trio of Devin Durrant, Brett Applegato and Jim Gerveth, BYU's coaches went shopping for talented replacements to fill the vacancies. What they got can aptly be termed a bargain.

Among the newcomers, the names Eric Kellogg, Jeff Chatman and Anthony Mathews are likely to be heard throughout the season to come. And for good reason.

Kellogg is a junior from Cleveland and came to BYU after sitting out the 1982-83 season. He played two years at Dickinson State College in North Dakota where as a freshman he was named first team all-conference in the North Dakota Athletic Conference. His 407 freshman points were more than any freshman had ever scored in the school's history. He was also one of the team's leading rebounders. His sophomore season he was named second team all-conference.

BYU came across the 6-foot-8 Kellogg in a roundabout way. Academic problems led to Kellogg's transfer to Imperial Valley Junior College in California. Any transfer from a four-year school requires the player to sit out one complete season.

During his redshirt year Kellogg said he was playing in a pickup game when he was spotted by a former BYU alumna Bob Koursten. He talked to Kellogg about the possibilities of playing for BYU and brought him to the campus. Kellogg met coach Ladell Andersen and said he was impressed with his sincerity.

"Meeting Coach Andersen was a determining factor," he said. "He told me I wasn't going to start but that I'd have to earn it."

Andersen had a lot of good things to say about Kellogg also. "When he gets himself conditioned to play major college ball we think that he will be an outstanding player," he said. "He dribbles a little better, passes a little bit better and scores a little bit better than the normal player his size and that makes him a great talent."

Over the years there haven't been a lot of black basketball players at BYU, and one of the reasons for that is the fear of protections. Kellogg said he heard nothing but negative comments from his friends when he was considering coming to Provo.

They said don't go to BYU. They don't have no brothers up there. They hang all the brothers up there," he said.

In high school the (BYU) sent me a lot of literature but I just threw it away. I heard a lot about blacks coming here and prejudices, but I found out it wasn't true."

Kellogg's older brother, Clark, plays for the Indiana Pacers in the NBA. Kellogg said having a brother compete professionally has been a source of added strength for him. "It inspired me a lot," he said. "I don't see him a lot but he tells me I've got the talent to make it."

Hebe BYU coaches were lucky in the way they found Kellogg, they were extremely fortunate to stumble across another "built for basketball" athlete, Jeff Chatman, a 6-foot-6 freshman from Tallaha, Ala.

Chatman, who resembles a miniature
Sam Perkins (NBA rookie) with his 8-foot, 11-inch arm span, attributes much of his success to his quick jump. "My jumping ability is really what got me here."

Indeed, it was during Alabama's high school all-star game that Chatman first made an impression on BYU coaches who were there after the Cougars' victory over Alabama's Birmingham in the first round of the NCAA playoffs last year. Chatman, who did his part in the victory up the desk with an MVP effort, came away with 16

Freshman forward Anthony Mathews shoots over junior collegiatransfer Eric Kellogg in practice. Mathews and Kellogg are two of eight new players expected to contribute to the men's basketball team this season.

"The food here is nothing like the South," complained Chatman, with a smile.

Mathews, a 6-5 freshman from Modesto, Calif., only visited one college before finalizing his decision. BYU was his first and last recruiting trip.

Mathews said he had heard of BYU before they began keeping tabs on him. "I never thought I would come here, though," he said.

Mathews said he opted for BYU, despite having heard a lot of negative comments, because "academically it's a real good school" and he liked the campus and the people he met.

"A lot of players that are black hear a lot about Mormons, but when I came here I found out it wasn't true," he said.

Mathews is working hard to make the transition from a high school player to a competitive college athlete. He said some of the differences were an added emphasis on defense and getting up and down the court faster.

"In high school you really stand out if you're good," he said. "In college there's no more being a star—you're right up there with everybody."

Mathews said coming to BYU has not been a problem socially, adding that he's enjoyed getting to know new friends
in a new environment. As a matter of fact,
the greatest cause of anguish for Chatman
is the food they serve in Provo.

His senior year's statistics were equally impressive—26 points with 12 rebounds per game, earning him all state honors for the second straight year.

Recruited as a small forward, BYU coaches are impressed with Chatman for his athletic as well as academic abilities.
Anderson refers to him as "a great kid and a great student. He has a good basketball body—long arms with big hands. He has a lot of raw talent and is in the developing stage."

Chatman, who maintained a 3.9 GPA throughout his high school career, said he was influenced to come to BYU largely because of its stress on academics.

"They (the recruiting coaches) took me straight to the academics before they showed me the athletic part of the university," he said.

Hailing from a predominantly white school, Chatman said coming to BYU has not been a problem socially, adding that
he's enjoyed getting to know new friends
in a new environment. As a matter of fact,
the greatest cause of anguish for Chatman
is the food they serve in Provo.

NBA brawl followed official injury

(AP)—One of the little discussed aspects of last week's ugly Superstar Brawl involving Larry Bird, Julius Erving and Moses Malone was that there was only one official working the game.

Referee Jack Madden suffered a severe knee injury midway through the third quarter and Dick Bavetta was alone when the fighting started later in the period.

Women's poll picks Georgia as top team

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—Georgia became the ninth team in nine years to rise to the top of the college women's basketball rankings when the preseason poll was announced.

The Lady Bulldogs received 49 first-place votes and 1,280 points from the nationwide panel of 64 women's coaches. The voting is compiled by Mel Greenberg of the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Texas received 13 first-place ballots and 1,204 to take second in the preseason vote. The Longhorns are followed by Old Dominion, Long Beach State and two-time NCAA defending champion Southern California.

BYU's Tresa Spaulding follows up a shot during a game last season. The Cougars, defending High Country Athletic Conference champions, are the unanimous preseason choice to repeat as league title holders.

Women cagers eager to defend league title

By TOM WALTON
Universe Sports Writer

While the BYU men's basketball team is rebuilding, the women cagers are primed and ready to defend their 1983-84 High Country Athletic Conference championship.

In their preseason poll, the HCAC coaches tabbed BYU as the favorite to repeat as conference champions.

Courtney Leishman, in his eighth year as Cougar head coach, agreed with the other HCAC coaches. "This might be the best balanced team we've had since I've been here," Leishman said. "Top to bottom this could be the best team."

"We have excellent players," he continued. "I believe our players have character as well as athletic ability."

Leishman is faced with the prospect of replacing two starters, Lori Vreelands and Valerie Cravens, who graduated after last season.

"We have a good nucleus of players coming back," Leishman said. "We're looking to our three seniors to give the team a lot of leadership."

The Cougar coach is talking about 5-foot-11 forward Cindy Battistone, 5-foot-9 forward Jill Coleman, and 5-foot-6 point guard Kathy Denton.

Leishman was generous in his praise of Denton. "She is an exceptional athlete. We're looking for Kathy to have a great year," he said.

The three seniors will provide the leadership, but look for 6-foot-7 sophomore center Tresa Spaulding to be the intimidating force inside. Spaulding was named one of the five alternates to the U.S. women's basketball team for the Summer Olympic Games.

The big thing she gained this summer was confidence in her ability," said Leishman. "She was on the floor with great players and learned she could compete with them."

Leishman said he has not yet decided upon a starting lineup, but mentioned that sophomore Virginia Busby would see action at the guard line with Denton. Karen Hancock Bean will back up Spaulding at center and also see action at forward.

BYU has six returnees from last year's squad, but the bulk of the bench will be taken up by six freshmen.

Despite the bench's inexperience, Leishman does not see depth as being a problem.

"All six of the freshmen are quality athletes," he said. "I think this is the best recruiting class I've ever had. They will give us immediate help."

Leishman is especially high on 6-foot-1 forward Kathy Nixon from Duncunville, Texas. "She was one of the top line high school players in the nation last year," he said.

Other freshmen to watch will be two guards from Orem, 5-foot-7 Julie Schupp and 5-foot-9 Tansie McIntire.

Leishman does not plan to change the style of attack Cougar fans have grown accustomed to. "We are going to play organized fast-break basketball," he said. "Year in and year out, we are in the top five or six in the country in scoring, and we plan to stay there."

When the other team has the ball, BYU will utilize multiple defensive options. "We will do whatever we need to do in a given game situation, be it zone or man-to-man," Leishman said.

"A lot of people think that because we use a 30-second clock in the game, defense is lacking, but I disagree. The players know the other team has to shoot within 30 seconds, and they put forth more of an effort on defense than if the other team was just holding the ball outside," he said.

The Cougars will open the season at home with games Nov. 23 and 24 against Montana State and San Francisco.

Murphy's Law can be reversed

Knowing what can go wrong reduces errors, professor says

By NAOMI HORNE
Universe Staff Writer

When Edsel Murphy said if anything can go wrong it will, he wasn't being as cynical as most people think. Listeners were told Wednesday by a professor to the Department of Electrical Engineering.

Finding mistakes in time to correct them is the most important task both professionals and students can accomplish, said John Clegg, during his Flex Market of Ideas lecture.

Murphy's Law about things going wrong should be taken more seriously, Clegg said. Anyone involved in any sort of project needs to consider what can happen to guard against the eventuality of a serious mistake.

"Think with imagination," Clegg said. "Think about Murphy's big if. If we can think of everything that will go wrong, we can keep things from going wrong."

It is hard to correct errors before they are found, he said.

An error can be defined as the difference between what happens and what should happen. Unfortunately, not everyone enjoys coming to grips with it.

Suppression of mistakes can lead to the making of more, Clegg said. However, it is human nature to try to keep shortcomings quiet instead of searching for them.

"If you find a hole in your understanding, that's an opportunity to fill that hole," Clegg said. Students tend to wait and let tests show them where the holes in their understanding are.

"If you could ask yourself the kinds of questions you think are important about your subject, you have them answered before the examination," Clegg said.

There are people who are employed to track down and correct mistakes. Clegg mentioned his experiences during the Missile Gap as an example.

During the 1960s, the Soviet Union had a long-range missile that could reach the United States, while the United States did not have a comparable weapon. As a result, 50 American corporations were tied together to design and build a missile with the same capabilities. Clegg was hired to find out what might go wrong during construction of the missile, and why.

"It's not hard to find the errors, but oh, so necessary to find out what they are and get them fixed," he said.

Negative feelings and guilt were responsible for some mistakes and miscalculations in the missile project, Clegg said. However, the mistakes were found and corrected because people were looking for them.

Some of the errors were hard to see, but because they were caught, important corrections were made.

Doctor goes back to school after 30 years

By RUSSELL J. MATHEWS
Universe Staff Writer

To some, four years of college plus medical school would be education enough for anyone, but a 64-year-old medical doctor from Bountiful, Utah, is back for more.

Dr. Richard T. VanOrden is a BYU graduate student working on his master's degree in health administration (MHA) and has practiced medicine for the past 30 years.

"After being out of school for 30 years and working full time, going to graduate school is tough," VanOrden said.

Nothing is more likely to let one grow older than retiring. His golden years are going to be active ones, he said.

It is not worth it for me to go back to college for financial rewards," VanOrden said.

Along with his medical practice, VanOrden is pursuing a career in health administration because of the changes he said that are taking place in the health care industry.

Too many physicians get into a rut and stop their education because of the financial rewards of practicing medicine, he said.

Physicians in this day are going to need a better and more rounded education, particularly in the field of business.

VanOrden said many physicians are too wrapped up in traditional forms of medicine and do not yet have a full understanding of the changing times in health care.

In recent years, large corporations have started forming health care maintenance organizations as an alternative to traditional hospital care. Their objective is to make health care more affordable.

VanOrden said some physicians feel big health care organizations are moving in on their turf. These bureaucrats are doing good and are hard working, and physicians are not seeing this. They

Computer program to analyze mate is called 'absurd' by psychiatrist

CHICAGO (AP)—A home computer program that offers people a chance to psychoanalyze their sex lives, parents or bosses could help them get along better, says the psychiatrist who developed it. But a critic calls the idea "absurd."

Psychiatrist Richard Gallagher, of suburban Downers Grove, said his program is just "an extension" of what he's been doing for years — "kindling the power of the human mind."

"You get a limited degree of help to allow you to deal with people and your world," said Gallagher, co-writer of the program called Mind Probe.

A list of 66 adjectives appears on the computer screen, and the user types in agreement or disagreement that each adjective describes the other person.

The computer then uses this data to compile a psychological profile of that person, and offers advice on how to deal with him or her.

One magazine advertisement promoting Mind Probe promises: "We'll get you inside her head. The rest is up to you."

Such use of computers has sparked controversy within the medical community.

Using computers in psychiatry is "absurd," wrote Dr. Victor A. Lewis-Fetters of Milwaukee in a letter to the American Medical News.

"It reduces our art, that of identifying and relieving human distress, to a soulless, mechanical process that in no way takes into account the nuances of interpersonal relationships," she wrote.

She did not answer calls for additional comment Wednesday.

Gallagher acknowledged that reactions from his colleagues range from "amusement to contempt" but said, "A limited consultation is better than nothing."

Mind Probe, distributed by Human Edge Software of Palo Alto, Calif., sells for $50 to $80, depending on which model computer is being used.
